Q: How to use multiple x86_64 and x86-64 specific flags at build time? How do I use multiple x86_64 and x86-64 specific flags at build time? Note: the idea is to make C++98 the default. My specific use-case: I have a Fortran (GCC-based) project where I need to develop on a 32-bit computer while compiling for a 64-bit executable. My problems: I'm not sure how to pass the -m32 flag at the make stage. And even if it is possible, I'm not really convinced it is the right thing to do (what if I want to start working on a 64-bit project later?). Also: I'm quite sure that I've seen this somewhere in the past (Java?) but I can't find it now. How can I use multiple different (x86_64, x86) specific flags at build time? If I pass -m32 for the make stage, it will also pass -m32 for the link stage. How does the C++ linker chooses the architecture for a shared library? A: GCC on most systems uses the following linker flags to generate the necessary relocations, which is where the -m32 compiler flag is applied. When building a shared library, use the following linker command: g++ -shared -Wl,--strip-all -Wl,--gc-sections \ -Wl,--add-needed -nostdlib -o libxyz.so Note that the -m32 compiler flag is applied to all the linker flags above. and they were giving all the credit to each other. Incidentally, do you agree that a company should be able to sell a service if they want to? Well, nobody forces them to provide them the service unless they want them! It's my opinion that they should be able to. But, that's the reason you gotta remember that there's also the fact that there's a difference between these two philosophies and I don't know which is yours. I think that… I have to say I'm not fond of this mandatory to sell service thing and I'm not in a big rush to start it, but if it◆

Monday, April 22, 2014 How you can find better ways to make your family happy A University of Utah survey has found that nearly half of all marriages in the U.S. end in divorce. In fact, whether we are talking about couples or single people, just half of all people in marriages actually stay together. And while there are many reasons why people end their marriages, it seems that one of the bigger problems is that there is a lack of happy marriages. However, you can change that by just spending some time with your family. In a recent survey, the University of Utah found that the happiest people in the U.S. tend to have two things in common. First, they spend time with their families. These people are the ones who are the most satisfied with their day-to-day lives. This just makes sense, as spending time with your family is the healthiest, most productive activity that you can do. Of course, not all people have happy families and it's not always easy to get everyone in a household to spend more time with each other. This is where the second common trait of happy families really kicks in. People who are the happiest spend time with their families, but they also treat them with respect. They listen to their family members when they are talking. They are empathetic and interested in their family members' concerns. If you are in a family like this, then you're in a pretty good place, since your family will feel comfortable enough to discuss important issues. On the other hand, if you have a family that isn't quite like this, perhaps spending more time with your family would be the first step to fixing things. Perhaps, if you were to change the way you communicate with your family, they would feel more like your friends and family members. It's also very possible that you need to have more fun together as a family, so that you don't have to put stress on every day of your lives. However, there are ways to make a happy life even happier. There are many things you can do to make your family life more enjoyable. — If you are looking for ways to overcome the problems of unhappy marriages, then try to be a better listener. When your family members feel like they can share their concerns, they are much more
