Paraneoplastic pemphigus: an unusual paraneoplastic phenomenon with fatal outcome. Paraneoplastic pemphigus is a rare type of autoimmune intra-epidermal blistering disease that rarely responds to systemic therapy. Immunosuppressive therapy alone has proved to be ineffective. We describe a case of paraneoplastic pemphigus in an 84-year-old man who initially presented with a history of painful oral ulceration and erythema. The diagnosis of paraneoplastic pemphigus was made based on the clinical features, direct immunofluorescence findings and the negative anti-desmoglein (Dsg) 1 and 3 antibody titers. The patient was started on systemic corticosteroids and various immunosuppressants but died from status epilepticus 3 weeks later despite immunomodulatory treatment. This case highlights the importance of early diagnosis of paraneoplastic pemphigus, resulting in prompt and effective therapy. The prevalence of left-sided thoracic outlet syndrome and postoperative pain relief after anterolateral decompression. Thoracic outlet syndrome (TOS) is one of the most difficult disorders to diagnose and treat. We examined the prevalence of TOS, morbidity of anterolateral decompression (ALD), and patient-perceived relief of preoperative and postoperative pain. In an Internet-based survey, 507 neurologically symptomatic subjects were surveyed to determine the prevalence of TOS, symptom severity, and relief of symptoms with surgery. Only 27 percent of patients with painful upper extremity symptoms thought that their symptoms were relieved with ALD. The majority of patients seeking ALD (82 percent) had symptoms for greater than one year. Despite proven symptom resolution in 92 percent of patients, 40 percent had limitations in physical activity due to complications of ALD. These results suggest that ALD has only a limited role in the treatment of patients with primary ALD. Surgical decompression for TOS causes significant morbidity. Q: Why use `gtk_main` in some of the examples? In the docs, it says When you are programming for the GUI, `gtk_main()` is a convenient way to start up the application. I have this function in my code `#include #include #include`

As anyone who watches the weather knows, the months leading up to the winter solstice are a fun time of year — so I always enjoy the few moments of clarity to celebrate the Mid-Winter turn-around. The solstice is the moment when the Earth reaches its highest point, an event called the point of perigee, and the days get longer and the nights get shorter. This, of course, is why there is no night in February when the winter solstice occurs, and why the days get longer and the nights get shorter in the summer. The first hint of the coming winter is the turning of the year, which is responsible for growing the sprigs of wood in the windows. Soon enough, there's a chance that you'll be walking around in morning coats and woolen hats, avoiding the pollution of the fumes from the newly lit candles. In the British tradition of celebrating the solstice, it's tradition to buy lots of bottles of alcohol and keep them out on the dinner table. It's sort of a pre-Christmas party, even though it's long after Christmas. The downside to this tradition is that as the days get longer and the nights get shorter, the guests will start getting hungry and late to the party, which is especially unfortunate because winter meals are often more interesting than summer ones. So here is my recipe for a simple lentil stew made with leeks and spinach. This soup is perfect after a long day outside, when there's some inside-out thinking going on. Of course, this is a long time before the winter solstice, but it's time to think about savory, warming food, not just lighter fare. In order to celebrate the coming winter, I've served this stew with toasted caraway bread, which makes it feel like a hearty meal even though it's cold outside and you're sitting in the kitchen. "On the winter solstice, it is customary to keep a fire alight, to invite guests into your house and to eat, drink, and keep your place warm,” said the Roman historian Pliny the Elder in the second century. “Go out into the world, though, and the air may be icy cold.” A little fire seems appropriate right now, but it’s not always necessary to have the house all toasty,
