What's New In?

It is a small application which allows you to set the date of all files or folders. You can change all three dates (last write, creation and last access). Why is it not working? This version of Setdate works as a Windows shell extension. It is designed to work in Windows XP or Windows Vista. As a result, the user interface is slightly different in Windows 7. In Windows 7, there are no "Show all...", "Copy to...", "Delete" options in the context menu. Version 6.8.3.0 is a free version. It can be useful if you are not interested in the paid versions, but you need to add a "Set date" option to your file context menus. It does not have the following features: Shell context menus History The current version is not available for Windows XP. The author does not have enough time to maintain a Windows XP version, and it is not possible to add it in an easy way. Windows XP users can get the same functionality using Windows shell extensions. Update: A new version of Setdate is available for Windows XP: 6.8.4.0. How do I use Setdate? To use Setdate, you need to install it on your computer. You can find Setdate here. Launch Setdate from the Start menu. If you use Windows 7, Setdate looks like this: Click "Settings". Click the "Show date of all files" option. Click the "Set date" button to set the date. Click the "OK" button. In Windows 7, when you set the date, Setdate changes the date in your computer. It is possible to select specific files to change their date, or to change the date of the folder which contains these files. You can also set the date of a specific file using the "Show all..." option, "Copy to..." or "Delete". The "Show date of all files" option can be useful if you want to change the date of all files in your computer. Note: The "Show date of all files" option works correctly only in the context menu of your current Explorer window. Use the command prompt and the dir /s command to show the date of a file or folder. How to use the current version: The current version of Setdate works only in Windows Vista or Windows 7. The user interface of Windows XP is different. To set the date of a file or folder, simply double-click it and use the "Show date of all files" option. The date of the file or folder is shown in the File Info dialog. To set the date of all files in a folder, right-click on the folder and choose "Show date of all files".
