There are more than 800,000 people living with HIV/AIDS in Canada, and new HIV diagnoses make up more than 50% of the estimated 15,000 new infections. While HIV-associated dementia is increasingly rare in Canada, cognitive impairment remains under-diagnosed and under-treated in people with HIV and is a major unmet public health need. The project period extends over three years, beginning with a patient-oriented study examining the experiences and perceptions of living with cognitive impairments in people with HIV, followed by an epidemiological study of a cohort of community-based people with HIV to determine the prevalence of and risk factors for cognitive impairment and the implications of HIV-related cognitive impairments. This will be followed by the development of a web-based video-game prototype intervention to examine feasibility of an internet-delivered intervention to improve cognitive functioning. These data will be used to inform the design of a scalable program to prevent cognitive impairment in HIV. Finally, this program will be developed and tested in a pilot randomized controlled study of 250 community-based people with HIV. The proposed research is innovative in that it tests the use of a video-game to improve cognitive functioning among people with HIV. It is the first study to explore the capacity to improve cognitive functioning in people with HIV and is the first study to examine the effects of such a program on both cognitive function and quality of life.

The use of a video-game to deliver cognitive training is a novel and innovative approach to this issue. These studies will be carried out by a multidisciplinary research team.
