feel the presence of others. Vitamin B12 Responsive Premalignant Pseudocoarctation of the Aorta in Patients with Primary B-Cell Lymphoma. Pseudocoarctation of the aorta (PSCA) is characterized by distension of the pulmonary artery and a narrowed aortic arch that can mimic aortic dissection or ruptured dissecting aneurysm. PSCA is rare in children or young adults but is reported increasingly in older patients. Endemic regions with high prevalence of vitamin B12 deficiency have previously been described in patients with such disorder. We report four cases of PSCA that were diagnosed within a 5-year period in five oncological departments in Greece, whereby the diagnosis had been missed in the first two patients since these patients had persistent chest pain and obstructive signs. Vitamin B12 deficient subjects are at risk of pathological angiogenesis of small blood vessels that may result in aneurysms. To the best of our knowledge, this is the first report of PSCA in patients with primary B-cell lymphoma. We highlight potential pleiotrop
