French President Nicolas Sarkozy's ex-amourine Patricia Krim was caught cheating on the future President by having an affair with journalist James Allen. Allen has admitted he had unprotected sex with Krim, who worked as a secretary for Sarkozy during his time as interior minister and who the current President declared that he had ended his relationship with, but only after she made a scandalous allegation against him. On Friday, Allen, who worked as an editor of Le Monde, was summoned to appear at the investigative magistrate's office in Nanterre, near Paris. He has been charged with two counts of having non-marital sex with a person he is forbidden to date, under the Criminal Code. The arrest took place amid a royal spat over which member of the French royal family would hold the pre-Burger King job of President of France. When the scandal over Krim broke, last September, Sarkozy and his chief of staff, Claude Gueant, angrily dismissed the allegations as nonsense, telling reporters that Krim had made up the affair to get attention. In an address to the newspaper Liberation, Krim admitted lying, saying she had wanted to "dissuade [Sarkozy] from visiting his wife in the hospital." But, in a letter written by his lawyer in the case, Pierre Cornut-Gentille called Krim's claim that her lie had been 'a vile lie' to get attention and 'a salvo against an enemy of the couple' 'difficult to accept'. The case has inspired songs and art events, and was the subject of a television documentary last year. Krim, now 50, was briefly married to Sarkozy in 2007 and, in 2008, she made the claim that the President's then-ex-girlfriend, singer/model Carla Bruni had sewn Krim's dog tags into a pair of trousers to pay tribute to the threeyear affair the pair once had.
