Did NOT Know Blogger changed their web address. Then of course I was not getting updates about it. My blogs are all now under a totally different address, I don't know how to change it. But glad to be back! Welcome to the new Quilter's Village blog. If you've stopped by before and enjoyed your visit, welcome back, please follow me here and on Facebook for updates on upcoming posts. Thank you so much for taking the time to visit. Tuesday, February 16, 2009 Still Flatter... This just popped into my head. I have a feeling I'm not the only quilter who still flatter their quilts... It's the borders you create that give a quilt its final shape. At quilt shows, the flattening process begins with you. You measure out your borders - keeping in mind how much stuff you can stuff in there - then you cut them. However, if you're using a quilt as a border around a quilt, for instance, you've always got your ruler handy and you know just the right way to place it. Do you measure out your borders from the top or the bottom of the quilt, or is there a best place to measure from? Or, I sometimes chop my quilting around the edge of the quilt. Should I be cutting from the top or the bottom of the qu

"I really liked the Ragnarok engine and that gameplay concept. Both are a breath of fresh air, but I'd like to see those concepts take a little more refinement before I jump in to play a sequel." -- Four Leaves "The system is flawed, the story is kind of a mess but overall it's incredibly good. The game would have been easy to make a lot worse but they did a great job considering what they did. It's just a pity they are limiting the number of copies that the game will receive. " -- Redox "It's like a high fantasy, medieval 3D fighting game from the minds behind The Binding of Isaac." -- videogamer "It's worth playing and will definitely entertain you for awhile." -- Shadow.ac

Physical properties of exfoliated nanoporous surfaces from organic-inorganic composites. This article reports the synthesis of exfoliated iron oxide nanoporous materials by a melt-derived method and the investigation of their physical properties, such as surface wettability, surface roughness, tribological behavior, and chemical stability. The exfoliated iron oxide nanoporous materials can be easily obtained by melt-casting exfoliated clay, which is prepared by intercalation of a nonionic surfactant inside the galleries of layered iron oxide and subsequent exfoliation. Compared with the parent amorphous clay, the exfoliated nanoporous iron oxide (ENiP-FeOx) materials exhibit a good wettability and low surface roughness, as well as a desirable mechanical-electrical property, and a superior lubrication performance. The solid lubricants not only increase the wear-resistant friction coefficient, but also show superior chemical stability in both ambient air and an acidic-alkaline environment. Because of the synergistic effect, the exfoliated nanoporous iron oxide materials have a good tribological performance and stable chemical stability in liquid environments. The findings of this study have revealed that exfoliated nanoporous iron oxide materials represent an important kind of functional materials for various applications. A new tool for evaluation of hospital performance in pulmonary hypertension. We sought to examine if existing performance metrics in pulmonary hypertension (PH) accurately reflect the healthcare quality provided to these patients and, if not, if a new set of metrics can more accurately describe the quality of care provided. Patients with a diagnosis of PH and no other pulmonary disease from 2008 to 2014 were identified from the US Medicare 100% Benchmark Database bff6bb2d33

What's new in Elden Ring:

>Maryland Democrats and Republican lawmakers are negotiating to deal with a series of state tax cuts which expire Monday as part of the budget negotiations, and the proposal being discussed in both chambers of the General Assembly includes an upgrade to the Earned Income Tax Credit program. Gov. Larry Hogan (D), who campaigned on raising the state's state and local sales tax from 6 percent to 7 percent, and reducing or eliminating the property tax tax credit his ally Senate President Thomas V. Mike Miller (D-Calvert) and Del. Scott Pelker (D-Baltimore) crafted would take effect only if the legislature manages to agree to a budget by April 20, said there are other options being pushed by some legislators. "I really think that's part of the best way to structure this," Hogan said last week. "I think if there is truly full-on open-ended negotiations, then say if it really has a chance, the Earned Income tax credit seems like the almost the perfect place to start it and lower the sales tax and then get everyone on the same page for a revenue plan." While the main focus of the budget negotiations has been on finding ways to reduce, or even eliminate, billions of dollars in revenue cuts that could have a huge impact on Maryland's budget and education system, many legislators are also pushing for more permanent tax breaks to benefit low-income residents. A bipartisan group of lawmakers, including Miller, introduced a bill in Annapolis this week that would place a cap on property taxes, similar to what some states have, by eliminating an exemption from real estate transfer taxation for primary residences. "We've included that as an idea for consideration," said Senator James K. (Jay) Elgie (D-Montgomery), who is one of the leaders of the effort. "We have not discussed what the cost would be, or what revenue levels that would generate." The bill also would eliminate a tax on motor fuel that in some instances can be used to power an electric car. Sen. James T. Brochin (D-Baltimore County), who has added language to Elgie's bill that would create a so-called "carrot" incentive to encourage people who buy electric cars to sign up for the program, which can be used to obtain breaks on electric bills. Brochin said an incentive program for electric car use would
