After the birth of a new world, the world of the Three Kingdoms, in China, the world became a place where even strong conflicts and merciless wars were fought. From the largest nation, Wei, which was strong in the Center, to the smallest nation, Wu, which was strong on the West Coast, the land was ruled by five powerful nations. Thus the Three Kingdoms was born. Among these kingdoms, there were large differences in military strength. Wu was a nation with a strategic force of darters, cavalry knights, and infantry and they were capable of executing surprise attacks due to the high mobility of light horsemen. Wu's powerful archers and archery skills were legendary. They could shoot targets from ten miles away. Wei was the country of the elite soldiers, but they were weak on defense. Wei also had best soldiers on foot, who were strong in defense. The strong force in the Wei Army was the heavy cavalry knights, who were like tanks but were more flexible and mobile. Jin was a savage nation, and the best guerilla fighters. The average Jin person was armed with a naginata and hatchet. Jin had a special Ninja armed with a sword and chain dagger. Qi was a nation of martial arts fighters. In addition to the usual weapons, they used the long spear and half-sword. The main weapons of Qi were the staff and the long spear. Their main tactics were to quickly attack using the martial arts of the staff and spear. Yue was a nation of experts in the art of the crossbow. They had the best archers and crossbow infantry. Their training method was to fire crossbow bolts two shots in one. The shock of the crossbow shook the ground and inflicted damage on enemies. Xia was a country of bond warriors who were capable of fighting even in the dark. Their main weapons were the spear and shield. Yue was an era when battle between nations often featured martial arts. The differences between the techniques of the spear and the long spear made it easy to form a combined army. What's new:

Bloody Revolt This chapter's outline follows the Chinese novel's in that Ji Yun's words are not only used but expanded upon. Master Hua attempts to stop Ji Yun but is battered about by Ji Yun's words. Redarm finds himself part of Ji Yun's army. Later, Redarm finds that Ji Yun has already taught some of the Guo Army generals to fight like Yi Yin and his forces. In the end, when Ji Yun's army is not far from Fang Xuan's camp, Jaisu and Da Liu both pretend to be dead and are spirited away by other Royal Guards. Then Ji Yun's men arrive at Fang Xuan's camp. Fang Xuan is stunned by Ji Yun's army. Later, Ji Yun and Ji Sue appear before a surrendering Fang Xuan's garrison commander and demand for the latter's unconditional surrender. However, when the commander fails to stand his ground, Ji Yun has his men bug his own camp. Later, a battle breaks out between the two armies. Later, when the conflict is still raging in the air, the heads of the commanders at the siege line fall to the ground. Chapter 22 Ji Yun said, 'There is another thing you have to know: the best commander among them all, the fighting beast of a commander, is the Han chancellor Wang Ling. In the bleeding world of the Six Armies, three parties (Min Kingdom, Later Yan, and Cong Su) fight for supremacy. The Hans have set their base at Hanyang. The Hans had three primary goals: to earn a name for themselves by defeating the Min Kingdom, to gain the favor of Emperor Guangwu, and to defeat the minority Leizhou rebels who have declared themselves King of the Southern Islands, the Ocean of Light. Within the Han Dynasty, Wang Ling holds the third rank of the military. He is a true-blooded man in every sense of the word, and when he took office, he set his goal as for an aspiring commander, the pinnacle of humanity, to take it all with his steel horse as a pillar, riding atop the people of the Hans. Although he is high in the ranks, he fiercely hates his inferiors no matter what rank they have. Thus, if he had a chance to meet a potential rival, he would not bow his head and lowly approach it, but instead, challenge you to a duel. If you object, then you won't be able to win. Therefore, many of the commanders fall into his
