The spontaneous stopping behavior of endometrial cancer in the first three days after the onset of menopause was prospectively studied in 97 women with this neoplasm. The overall percentage of women never stopping the menopausal bleeding was about 70%. About 5% presented the first episodes between 1 and 5 days from the onset of menopause, and 16% between 6 and 10 days. We have also determined the correlation between the amount of blood loss during the premenopausal period and the stopping behavior of endometrial cancer in the first three days after menopause. The percentage of women never stopping the menopausal bleeding decreased with the amount of blood lost during premenopause; from about 85% in those who lost less than 20 ml of blood during premenopause to only about 40% in those with 50 or more ml. This reduction in the percentage of women never stopping the menopausal
