about a depth-first search in  $O(n)$  time I need to write a C program in which a graph is given with its vertices labeled from 1 to  $n$ . The problem is to find a depth-first search that will start at vertex 1, visit each vertex exactly once, and return the index of the vertex visited last. So my solution is a recursive implementation, but I am sure my explanation of why this algorithm works is wrong, could you please explain why the algorithm works? I think I need to check that I visited each vertex and start the search from it, and the problem is that if I reach a vertex that has no unvisited neighbor I have to start over at the last visited vertex.

int dfsSearch(int v) { if (v == n) { return -1; } if (visited[v]) { return -1; } visited[v] = true; printf("%d ", v); for (int i
