As the Chinese economy develops rapidly, there is an increasing interest in the population health profile of newly arrived migrants in Hong Kong. In this article, we examine the suicide mortality profile of young people born in China and Hong Kong, with a focus on the age at which the highest suicide rates occurred. The age-standardized suicide rates for all ages are compared with rates for the total population aged 15 to 34 years and with rates for the Chinese and Hong Kong birth cohorts in 1997. Between 1997 and 2003, suicide rates increased in young Chinese and Hong Kong men and women. Among men, the highest age-specific suicide rates between 1997 and 2003 were 30 and 24 years for Chinese and Hong Kong men, respectively. The highest suicide rates were observed in young men in the age groups 25 to 29 years and 20 to 24 years, and in young women in the age group 25 to 29 years, for both cohorts. These groups had significantly higher rates of suicide than their counterparts in Hong Kong and the total population. The suicide rate for young people in Hong Kong is higher than that of other areas of the world. More research is needed to understand the background of these suicides, to devise tailored prevention and treatment programs, and to identify effective interventions for this highly vulnerable group.Fatal Intoxication: When it's not a Lion We're still struggling to deal with the aftermath of a horrific circumstance at the Metropolitan Opera last Thursday when a lion lunged at one of its performers. The opera is OK. The performer is OK. The lion is in a zoo. The attacks by man and beast resulted in death by asphyxiation 0cc13bf012
