In a submission to a Senate inquiry into mental health reforms announced last month, the AMA's Victorian branch said minor changes to the plan would not improve patient care. "We are very disappointed with the government's approach, which we think is for the most part what we've been calling for, which is a reset back to the program that we announced last year," the AMA's Victorian executive director Dr Nick Sherwin said. "The trial will be taking place in a very short timeframe, and we expect that some of the points that we've raised and the evidence that we've presented will be hit and miss. "They're working very hard to make sure they don't make any of those mistakes, but we are not sure they'll succeed in doing that." The AMA recommended four key changes to the trial. It urged the government to finalise the trial's scope to ensure all patients are included, create a commission of health experts to be consulted and review of its initial proposal. "We don't think that they have thought through all of the implications of this trial on the day that the trial is concluded," Dr Sherwin said. "So, for example, in their proposal, they have moneys, including an increase in the number of beds in e79caf774b
