The Effect of Age on the Patient-reported Outcomes of Periodontitis Treatment: The Experience of a Private Periodontal Practice in Croatia. The aim of the study is to evaluate the influence of age in the patient's self-perceived periodontal condition and its treatment outcomes. One hundred four patients from 29 to 86 years old were examined, and treatment was provided according to the principles of periodontal therapy. Descriptive analysis of the study results showed significant differences in periodontal condition, patient's self-perceived periodontal condition and improvements following the periodontal treatment between the younger and older patients.

Q: What is the difference between SDE and SE? Possible Duplicate: Difference between Stochastic Differential Equation and Stochastic Differential Equation? In the introduction of an article, it says A stochastic differential equation (SDE) is a mathematical model that describes the time evolution of a system under the influence of two factors: continuous random fluctuations and predictable disturbances that appear in the dynamics of the system. I haven't come across stochastic differential equations before, but I found a website that uses SDE and SE interchangeably. I am not sure how to understand this difference between them, so I'd like to ask: What is the difference between SDE and SE? A: First of all, there is no difference between those two terms unless there is a possibility that the stochastic term is deterministic, which doesn't often happen. SDE is an equation where both stochastic and deterministic terms are present. SE is an equation where only the stochastic term is present. Often, the stochastic component in an SDE can be thought of as the variation over time of the probability distribution of the stochastic term, which is what it means when it says it is a stochastic term. So it doesn't make sense that "it is a stochastic term and a deterministic term". But it is true that the stochastic term in an SDE is random and it is a description of how randomness works in terms of probability. The SE is just the classical deterministic equation.
