The invention relates to a method of manufacturing a metal-oxide semiconductor (MOS) transistor, and more particularly, to a method of manufacturing a MOS transistor with a dual gate structure and a method of manufacturing a MOS transistor with a gate-all-around structure. In the prior art, transistors having different features may be manufactured to meet the electrical performance requirements for different applications. For example, a MOS transistor for a radio frequency (RF) circuit may have a gate structure with an extended portion over the active region, which increases the gate capacitance. A MOS transistor for a digital circuit may have a gate structure with a shorter gate length over the active region, which decreases the gate capacitance. In the prior art, the extending portion of the gate structure may be formed by depositing additional poly-silicon. However, during the etching operation, the area of the active region that is protected by the gate structure is covered with poly-silicon, and the etching operation causes damage to the active region. Accordingly, the active region can be damaged during the manufacturing process, and the production yield is reduced.
