The decarboxylative C-H activation of ketones 2a-k by Ni(III) complexes (3 and 4) was investigated. The reaction rates were found to increase with an increasing steric demand of the substrates (p-cymene > m-cymene > CH(3)SiH(3)) and higher reactivity for the mononuclear complexes 4 over the dinuclear complexes 3. Structural variation of the transition metal complexes led to changes in the reactivity of the complexes. Not only in the nickel(III) complexes 3 and 4, but also in the iron(III) complexes 2, the reaction rate was found to be dependent on the ligand set. For example, with iron(III) complexes [(R(3)ppy)(2)FeCl(2)] and [(R(3)ppy)(2)FeCl(3)] (R(3)ppy = 2-(9H-carbazol-9-yl)pyridine), which have sterically demanding tridentate ligands, no apparent reactivity was observed at room temperature. In contrast, when nonaromatic, sterically less demanding,
