To evaluate the efficacy, safety and patient acceptance of a new, non-thermal, mechanical dilatation of the trachea, the efficiency of the attempt was measured in patients with obstructive respiratory disorders. The energy required for air removal was determined under anaesthesia. To evaluate the technical device and the possibilities of using it, the dilatation technique was applied in some healthy volunteers. Both mechanical and thermal dilatation were compared with regard to the capacity for air removal. The final dilatation technique was evaluated clinically. The energy needed to remove air from the airways varied from 0.12 to 7.8 mJ for the three methods. In healthy volunteers only 0.56 mJ were required to achieve 75% of the best capacity. In the patients' airways 7.4 mJ were needed to dilate a 25 mm-diameter trachea by 80%. Atraumatic dilatation of the trachea is a safe and

My code is written in C# (not mvc) and I am using a streaming NetworkStream. When I run my program in the debugger, I get no error, but when I attempt to use it, I get an exception message like this: System.NotSupportedException: stream does not support Seek operations. Here is my current stream code: public static Stream stream; stream = new NetworkStream(server, port); My server code is simply a connection to a stream socket. I have looked at the following question and answer: System.NotSupportedException: Seek operation not supported? But I am not using a file stream, only a network stream. I am not sure where to go from here. Thanks. A: Your NetworkStream only knows how to handle the read requests, but not how to provide any way to tell whether the actual file data is complete. So, if you wish to seek to a specific position in the file, you will need to download the file to a local buffer and then seek to the appropriate position in that buffer. Unfortunately this is not a simple task, as you will need to keep track of the file position in your buffer. Once the stream is closed, it will be freed which will cause you to be out of sync with your buffer's current position. I would recommend looking into a library that will help you handle this case. For example, take a look at: .NET Wrapper for sftp.cs 6d1f23a050
