This is a course about ethics. This course covers a broad spectrum of topics related to the ethics and scholarship of the web. This course includes information about ethical issues related to the use of the web in higher education (such as plagiarism, copyright, peer review and self-archiving, and academic integrity). This course includes information about ethical issues related to the use of the web in higher education (such as plagiarism, copyright, peer review and self-archiving, and academic integrity). * This course is not intended to be a comprehensive survey of the topic. Rather, it is a starting point for discussion of ethical issues in the use of the web in higher education. * The course is expected to take about 1-2 hours per week, which includes viewing the video content. However, additional study time may be required for content that requires close reading. * The course is intended for faculty who are teaching undergraduate courses that are directly related to the use of the web in higher education. Some of the content of the course is more appropriate for faculty who teach courses that include only a small amount of web-based content. * The course will assume that the student has some level of familiarity with the use of the web in higher education (e.g., for general research purposes and for accessing electronic resources). * The course is NOT intended to provide an introduction to ethics or to provide a formal introduction to the topic of ethics, since the range of ethical issues that arise in this context is very broad. Rather, this course is intended as a starting point for discussion, and as a tool for improving teaching, learning, and research related to the use of the web in higher education. * The course is expected to be of interest to faculty members working in all departments of higher education, including areas such as writing, English, computer science, history, communications, and science. What's New in the CamCap?

CamCap lets you snap pictures with your webcam right out of your PC desktop. This allows you to take pictures right from a web browser, or Skype chats, without having to search for your webcam on your PC. It is really very simple to operate. Basically the built-in webcam wasn't working, and when I popped open the laptop, it was hot and working properly. Yes, and you need to have Quicktime installed on your computer for that to work. Also, a more permanent method is to use the built-in webcam tools (available in QuickTime Player) which can automatically copy the image to your desktop when the video or picture is taken. How long has it been since you ran the program? If it has been more than a day or two, then it is likely that the program has become unresponsive to you because of a number of problems. If the images still don't appear then there is a chance that the webcam is not working. You could also try rebooting the computer to see if that fixes the problem. I didn't try rebooting the laptop, but I did run the program, and waited 3 days, and the pictures still haven't appeared. The file is on a external hard drive, and I can see that its size has grown ever so slightly. Is this the type of problem which is caused by file corruption, or is there something else wrong?
