Combined treatment with HDA-1 and cis-diamminedichloroplatinum(II) (CDDP) in peritoneal carcinomatosis. The chemotherapeutic agent cis-diamminedichloroplatinum(II) (cis-DDP) is the active form of a group of platinum compounds, which have a certain potential in treatment of human cancer. As a derivative of the parent compound, its mechanism of action is distinct from that of the parent compound, and can be modulated by the delivery system. As a result of a rapid and continuous increase of blood flow in tumor vessels, a high dose of chemotherapeutic drugs given by a short infusion protocol can be delivered into the tumor tissue. Using this principle we have combined HDA-1, a hyperthermic agent, with cis-DDP and treated tumors in CD1 mice bearing intraperitoneal SKNSL-SV40C in order to evaluate the therapeutic effects and toxicity. The results show that combining HDA-1 with cis-DDP reduced the toxicity of treatment, synergistically increased the median survival and increased the response rate. Glomerular disease in children and adults with sickle cell anaemia. In a retrospective study, we reviewed the records of paediatric and adult patients admitted to the Department of Haematology, University of Texas M. D. Anderson Cancer Center, Houston, Texas, from January 1995 to July 1997. A total of 85 patients were identified as having sickle cell anaemia (SCA) and 19% of these had some degree of renal disease. We compared the outcome of our patients who were classified according to the National Kidney Foundation classification of sickle nephropathy with 39 other SCA patients enrolled in a local study. All the patients in this retrospective study were treated with hydroxyurea. Children with the haplotype HBB-S-beta-thalassaemia-S-beta-thalassaemia had a higher incidence of diabetic
