The other reason is that this Adobe review gives you a good impression about the image editing software: It is from the customer's point-of-view. I believe that this is a much more realistic way to review any program. Sure, you can do a comparative analysis on pretty much everything there is to know about Adobe Photoshop CC, including its impressive software engine, but that will just be a particular angle from which you see the program. I can confidently say that I would've never bought that panorama app I was praising on the review if this review hadn't been given to me before I did. I have to say that I went through a long process of testing the program, just to get a feeling for it, including a couple of months worth of using it as a scratch pad for ideas that I probably won't use anyway. So, I think that my online review was more than fair to Adobe. I just hope they don't think that I'm too harsh on them because I've spent $200 on the software. I honestly think that it will become a part of my computer setup. Maybe not even for me. My family uses this software more than anyone really deserves, including me, and I feel the need to share it with them, because I love it so much. Like all the programs these days, this new version offers a ton of new features. It offers a nice boost to editing speed and has much better integration than version 4. I couldn't find too many major bugs, or issues with any particular function. One thing to keep in mind is that the "Hello World" wouldn't work, nor would the way to sign in, both of which I think are still very buggy. I've been through the setup about ten times in the past week, and it's gotten better each time. I think it's important to provide enough feedback so users know what issues are already fixed or workarounds to use. And it means users can report any issues that are not yet resolved. So gentle, please let me know if there are any errors in my review! Good luck and thanks for using our site, please share with your friends and family.
